ear Members, our first lecture meeting at the Magda Artz Hall in Bardon on Tuesday 6th March was well-attended and the hall functioned well for our purposes. The speaker on the night, Annette Henderson on "Gorillas in my Soul", was excellent. Annette gave the audience a really personal view on the status and conservation of lowland gorilla populations in West Africa from her own, very challenging and sometimes very disturbing experiences. As we have now confirmed that the venue has a congenial atmosphere and is quite suitable for our monthly lectures, I hope to see many members at Magda Hall for our next lecture in April.

I would like to reflect here on our Membership level and composition - critical issues for the Society's future. The profile of RGSQ membership continues to comprise mainly middle-aged, pre-retirement and retired people who bring much valued experience from many walks of life and great enthusiasm to the various Society activities and special interest groups. It is important, however, to continue to attract younger members. This is difficult with the vast range of recreational and semi-professional activities, work and family commitments which compete for people's nowadavs. Many younger professional geographers starting out in their careers, and younger families with school-aged children who may once have joined the Society to go on special trips now organise their own trips online and travel in their own 4WDs which are ubiquitous. How to foster their interest in RGSQ and increase our membership is a perennial issue.

Council has often discussed this problem. Evening lectures are popular and are attended mostly by regular members. When opportunities arise, perhaps members could invite along any friends and acquaintances who may be interested in our lectures and activities. In future we will be looking at ways to advertise these events more widely.

We usually gain some new members who join RGSQ when they participate in our day-trips and overseas travel programs. We have university academic staff on Council and among the membership. The Society has recently recruited more student members, but more could be done to raise the profile of RGSQ within academic/university and also professional/government circles. All suggestions will be gratefully received!

One special interest initiative which may help in this regard is the newly-formed "Young Geographers" group. We are grateful to John Tasker (former UQ student and 2016 Keith Smith prize recipient) and Giselle Pickering (UQ Geography student) for setting up and leading this group. This is a space in which tertiary geography students and early to mid-career professionals can socialise, network and explore career pathway opportunities. The group aims to build the student and young professional membership base of the society and to improve the engagement of younger members in society activities. Future goals include a broader range of career networking or development activities and potentially extending the reach of the group to engage with and inspire high school aged students to consider geography as a future career pathway. Well done and good luck Young Geographers!

APRIL LECTURE

"Australia's Day": the search for a national "Day" in early 20th century Australia

by Dr Mark Cryle, published historian, presenter and teacher

Date: Tuesday, April 3 Time: 7.30pm-9pm

Venue: Magda Community Artz Hall, 80 Boundary Rd Bardon https://www.magdacommunityartz.org/tablet/about.html

There is a tendency to scan the past for the origins of any institution in the search for some sort of high moment of heroic invention and triumphal ascent into public prominence. The reality is often quite different. What the historian finds is something much messier - a national discursive fabric cluttered with loose, stuttering strands - some of which have continued to exist in some form and some of which are now confined to the footnotes of history books.

The recent public clamour and tensions around the significance of 26 January in our history is not a recent phenomenon. One hundred years ago Australians were discussing the merits or otherwise of a range of possible contenders for the position of the national "Day". Many were well-disposed towards identifying an historical landmark which purportedly transcended regional and political affiliations and was worthy of reverence. Few could agree on what that day should be. Anniversary Day, Foundation Day, Empire Day, Wattle Day, Landing Day, Australia Day (24 May), Eureka Day, Melbourne Cup Day and others all had their advocates. In 1916 Anzac Day joined the pack and immediately (yet temporarily) assumed prominence.

Dr Mark Cryle is a published historian, presenter and teacher. In 2015 he completed a PhD on the origins of Anzac Day to 1918. In 2016 he was awarded a Q Anzac 100 Fellowship from the State Library of Queensland. He was formerly the Manager of the Fryer Library at the University of Queensland. Mark has researched, written and presented on aspects of both Australian and British history and literature, including race relations, labour history, sport and politics. He has also conducted workshops on cross-cultural training. In another life Mark is a musician and songwriter.

NEW RGSQ website going live in late April

The new RGSQ website, which incorporates an online membership system, will be going live by the end of April 2018. When this happens, the Society's web address (www.rgsq.org.au) will stop linking to the current old web pages and go to the new website.

Those members who receive the Bulletin and Society notices by email, AND any who have provided us with an email address, will be notified as soon as it is live.

As well as providing a better way of informing the community about RGSQ, the new website will allow members and guests (where appropriate) to

- √ lookup the latest calendar of the Society's events, activities and lectures;
- ✓ book and pay online for Society activities;
- ✓ renew and pay annual memberships online (potential new members can apply online).

There will be a private section where every individual member can log in to see information for "members only". Members will also be able to securely update their personal "profile" - the information they have provided the Society about themselves.

To assist members with use of the new website, the June 5th Tuesday evening meeting/lecture will be dedicated to the new website. Members will be provided with an overview of the new website followed by hands-on assistance with using it. Bring your own device (laptop, apple or mobile phone - we will provide a Wi-Fi network link) on Tuesday 5th June and explore our new website. We will have some laptops for use on the night for those members who are unable to bring a device.

Sessions will be held in the RGSQ office for those members who cannot make the evening of Tuesday 5th June and would like assistance with using the new website. Dates and times for these sessions are yet to be determined.

The new system uses email addresses for logging in and for communication, if members wish. We would therefore like to get a current working email address for each member of the Society, including individuals included in Household memberships. If you don't think we have your latest email address either email it into the office at info@rgsq.org.au (please include your membership number as shown on your latest renewal notice) or bring it along to the information evening on Tuesday 5th June.

Map Group Event Report

By Ian Francis, RGSQ Map Group member

On 20th May eighteen members of the Map Group visited the Brisbane City Council Archives at Moorooka. Kate Harbison was our enthusiastic host who took us through static and electronic displays of maps and mapping related information.

The BCC archives has many fine maps of early Brisbane and most in remarkable condition. The group was transfixed by the quality and penmanship of the material displayed. Many discussions were generated from the various exhibits.

One of the highlights of the tour were the old surveyor's field books from 1910 onwards. The penmanship and detail in these books is exquisite.

Afterwards the group had lunch in the Red Lion Hotel at Moorooka. The day was another successful event for the RGSQ

Map Group.

On Conservation of the West African Gorillas

Personal Synopsis of the March lecture - 'Gorillas in my Soul"

By Leo Scanlan, RGSQ member

Photos from the March Lecture "Gorillas in my Soul" held at Magda Community Artz Hall; courtesy of Kay Rees.

I went along with no pre-conceptions about the content of RGSQ's monthly lecture on Tuesday, March 6 at the Magda Community Arts Hall in Bardon. I had no abiding ambition to rescue primates but was completely blown away with Annette's story and her journey in Gabon, West Africa.

This story is a great conservation story in itself which can be applied to many of the other great conservation stories to come out of Africa. To date, I haven't read Annette's book, 'Wild Spirit', but it's now on my list of to-do's in the not too distant future and it's not hard to see how Annette became so deeply involved in this great African conservation journey.

I must say I haven't as yet had the 'pleasure' of coming face to face with the gorillas of Africa. However, if I keep going back to Africa, some time I'm bound to run across the gorillas. Annette's lecture this evening has brought back many happy memories of the wonderful people and places that I have visited in Africa and the interlocking story of looking in on a huge conservation effort along the way.

In the prelude to one of my past treks for the Society to Africa, I mentioned that we may be one of the last generations, or perhaps the last, to view the vast array of animal species that inhabit Africa. The pressure on these most precious parts of our planet is really part of a conservation effort we just cannot afford to lose. Thanks Annette for sharing your story this evening and giving me further inspiration to explore what else is tucked away in different parts of Africa.

My own experience in seeing Sweetwater Chimp Conservancy in Kenya and from the stories coming from the pages of National Geographic related to Dian Fossey, Jane Goodall, Dame Dephne Sheldrick and of course at home here in Australia we can draw inspiration from people like Deborah Tabart who is so passionate about the preservation of our own spectacular Koalas.

Next year, 2019, with the help of the Annette Hendersons of this world and drawing on my own experience, I'm hopeful that I can inspire some of you to join with RGSQ Traveller and accompany me on a new journey of discovery and see firsthand some of the great national parks and conservation stories in Africa first hand.

Vale, Dr Elise Lindgren

27 February 1927 - 28 December 2017 (married name Tugby, née Sellgren)

Elise was a continual member of RGSQ from 1969 until 2017.

Master of Science, The University of Sydney, 1955; Doctor of Philosophy, The Australian National University, 1964. Lectured at The University of Queensland, Department of Geography (and successors) 1961 to 1994.

Born in Griffith, New South Wales, Elise initially graduated as one of very few female geologists. Principally a scientist, her other academic pursuit was cultural and regional geography. With her then husband, anthropologist Dr Donald Tugby, she undertook several decades of field work from the late 1950s in South-east Asia, focussed upon the Mandailing matrilineal society in remote northern Sumatra and others in southern Thailand.

Elise was a citizen of the world, always questioning human motivation and directions. She legitimised studies of South-east Asia in The University of Queensland's Department of Geography, then essentially Euro-centric in outlook. She likewise pioneered environmental studies, introducing the university's first Environmental Conservation course and engaged in conservation debates in Queensland and Australia. For example, campaigning for the rehabilitation of Stradbroke Island following sandmining. Like many academic women of her time, Elise was under-acknowledged for her ideas and innovation, her steadfastness and her impact in the academic and research worlds.

After completing my Ph.D. at the University of Hawaii, I first met Elise in 1984 on returning to Brisbane when I applied for a lectureship in human geography at The University of Queensland. The interview panel comprised three male members and Elise, the only female academic geographer at the time. I remember her supportive and encouraging remarks. Over the next decade Elise and I were the only women on the academic staff of the Geography Department. We became close friends and taught together in the South-east Asian and the Geography of China courses. I much admired her knowledge about these regions and her field-based experiences of their cultures. She was a champion of improving women's roles and achievements in academia and society at large. She graciously mentored me as a junior colleague, and provided a role model for dealing with students, departmental politics and the, sometimes, challenging nature of university administration.

Elise will be greatly missed.

Volunteers to assist with the 2018 Australian Competition

In April, the Competition will again require assistance from Society members.

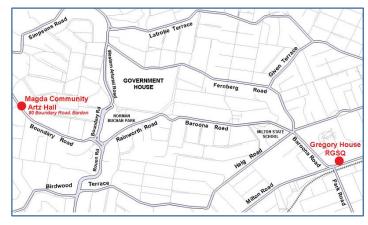

April Tuesday 24 to Friday 27, but not Wednesday 25 (ANZAC Day) – Question booklets and Answer sheets mailout. This requires counting/weighing of Question booklets and Answer sheets and placing them in large envelopes, post satchels or boxes. This is a complex mailout, which takes a few days to complete with 6-8 volunteers required each day. In the last few years it has taken about three days to complete the sorting and packing. The mail-out will take place at RGSQ in Unit 2, on the first floor.

If you are available on any of the days, we would love to hear from you. Please contact us on 07 3368 2066 or email admin@rgsq.org.au.
